

House Concerts... there's no place like home.

I'm so glad you're considering the possibility of hosting a House concert in your home. I think "live" music is really special. I also believe whenever families have the opportunity to experience "live" music together amazing things can happen. We become connected in so many ways and on so many levels experiencing life in the moment.

From Wikipedia, the free encyclopedia: The definition of house concert is not definite but is generally taken as a concert that's presented in someone's home, or a nearby private space, for example a barn or back yard.

- Usually, but not always, the audience capacity is smaller than at a coffeehouse or club.
- The money collected usually (but not always) goes straight to the performers, with no "profit motive" on the presenter's part.
- Often, but not always, house concerts are conducted "by invitation" (for practical reasons), rather than as "public" concerts like a club or concert hall.
- Often - again with exceptions - there is little or no "sound system" - performers play and sing acoustically, unless someone needs a little amp for their keyboard.
- Refreshments, if any, are usually either a "pot luck" brought by the listeners, or provided by the hosts using a bit of the gate receipts.
- Sometimes - but definitely not always - the performers get a meal and/or lodging with the presenters as part of their compensation.

I've been focusing on the month of April for booking house concerts calling it the "Here Comes the Sun - House Concert Tour". I have had a dozen or so inquiries so far and booked a few dates but there are still dates available. If you have a date in mind or a question please drop me an e-mail or call my office ASAP and we can make plans to add you to the Here Comes the Sun Tour!
